

AN ORIGINAL WWII CODE TALKER DEAD AT 90

by George Hardeen

Flags on his Navajo Nation were flown at half-staff from sunrise on Sept. 11 until sunset on Sept. 15 honoring Navajo Code Talker Allen Dale June, 90, who died Sept. 8.

"Allen Dale June was renowned as one of the original 29 Navajo Code Talkers who served the U. S. A., the Marine Corps and the Navajo Nation during World War II with courage, honor and distinction," said Navajo Nation President Joe Shirley Jr.

"Mr. June endured the horrors of combat on Guadalcanal and Iwo Jima as a radio operator in a forward echelon against hostile forces," he said. "The Navajo Nation unites and offers prayers and deepest condolences to his family during this time of grief."

June was born on Nov. 28, 1921, to Kinlichii nii-Tl izi Lani and born for Ye'ii Dine Tachii' nii. He passed away at the Prescott Veterans Hospital of Natural causes.

He graduated from the Tuba City Vocational High School in Tuba City, AZ, in 1941. Upon hearing the news of the outbreak of WWII, June hitchhiked to Fort Defiance on his way to Fort Wingate when he heard the announcement seeking Navajos who would become Code Talkers.

He joined the U. S. Marines to become one of the first 29 Navajos to compose the secret group that developed an unbreakable code.

He served honorably from 1941 to 1945 and was honorably discharged with the rank of Sergeant.

After his military service, Mr. June graduated from New Mexico Highlands University in Las Cruces, NM, in 1952 with a bachelor's degree in business administration, accounting and economics. He went on to earn a master's degree from the University of Utah in 1975.

Although he spoke little about having been a Code Talker, in later life he always wore his red Navajo Code Talker cap with his name on it.

In 2001, he was awarded the Congressional Gold Medal along with the other original Code Talkers for his pioneering Marine service.

He is survived by his wife, Virginia June, his brothers Adolph, Floyd, Jackie, and Keith, 11 children, nieces and nephews and many grandchildren.

His funeral was held Sept. 15 at the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Page, AZ. Burial with full military honors was in the family cemetery in Kaibeto. AZ.

Retirement System Outdated Says Retired General

The U.S. military must overhaul and reduce the cost of paying its people, funding their retirements and underwriting their health care, a top Pentagon adviser said.

Arnold Punaro said Defense Department budgeteers are already taking aim at weapons programs and operations and maintenance accounts. But it was regarding the military's skyrocketing personnel costs that the retired Marine Corps General and former senior SAIC executive sounded the loudest alarm during a Sept.

8 presentation at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, a Washington think tank.

Punaro, a Defense Business Board senior fellow, led a DBB task force that in July recommended that Defense Secretary Robert Gates close U.S. Joint Forces Command. Weeks later, Gates proposed doing just that.

Punaro called the military's pension setup a "pre-volunteer-force retirement

COMMANDANT'S COLUMN

Marines,

As we head into the Holiday season, the Detachment has a few things on the schedule before things slow down. We had Boy Scout Brett Curtis come in and address the Detachment on a project he is endeavoring upon at the National Cemetery at Washington's Crossing. He is going to build up the family Committal Shelter pavilion at there. He is seeking donations of money and time to help achieve his goal. He is planning to do the building up of this pavilion the last half of November. If you have any interest, please contact me.

We also had Kevin Miller, the area Toys for Tots Coordinator, present the plan for the replacement of the Willow Grove Marines as they are moving to Fort Dix. He brought a list of businesses that are participating in the program and looking for volunteers to help with the program. If you can help, contact Kevin at toysfortots@com-cast.net.

On Sunday, Oct. 25, the All Divisions Detachment will be sponsoring the 26th Anniversary observance to honor those killed in the Marine Barrack bombing in Beirut, Lebanon, in 1983. It will take place at Fogleitta Plaza in Penns Landing in Philadelphia. It will begin at 10 a.m. I have attended the past five years and will be there again this year. The ceremony is fairly short and usually well attended by many Marine Corps League Detachments. I'm hoping that we can again display our colors at this ceremony. Please try to make time to attend to represent your detachment and honor those fallen Marines.

The Detachment will be doing the Marine Corps League Rose Program this year. We will be this fund raiser the weekend of Oct. 30-31. We are working on getting the Liquor Store in Doylestown and one in Newtown. If you can help your Detachment on this endeavor, please contact me or Junior Vice Commandant Jack Gentile. More information will be forthcoming at the October Meeting.

The Detachment voted to have a Marine Corps Birthday Ball on Saturday, Nov. 6, at the Water Wheel in Doylestown. Junior Vice Gentile and his committee are working on getting everything set up and will have all the information available at the October meeting. Please put this on your calendar and help celebrate the Marine Corps Birthday.

See you at the October Meeting.

CPL. & MRS. ROBERT M. SUNDLING The former Miss Amy Lynn Monastero married our own Bob Sundling Aug. 28. They are shown walking under the drawn swords of Bob's fellow MARTD Marines.

'ROSE GARDEN' POSTER D. I. CHUCK TALIANO LAID TO REST

Sgt. Chuck Taliano was awaiting an honorable discharge at Marine Corps Recruit Depot Parris Island in 1968 when a reservist writing a book about boot camp snapped a picture of him giving a recruit an "attitude readjustment."

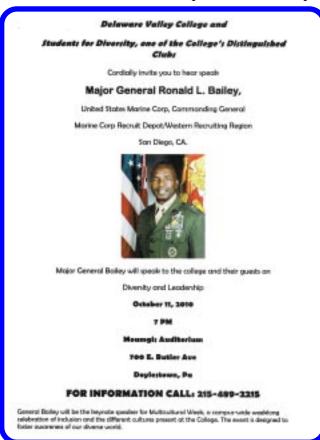

That cemented Taliano's place in Corps legend.

The photo captured his snarling mug inches from a fresh-faced recruit with the caption, "We don't promise you a rose garden." It was printed on thousands of Marine Corps recruiting posters printed during the 1970s and 1980s.

The poster made Taliano a celebrity among Marines, said Stephen Wise, curator of the Parris Island Museum, where Taliano worked as manager of the gift shop.

"Everyone from Generals to former Privates would stop by to see him," Wise said. "Everyone knew Chuck."

Taliano, 65, died in his Beaufort home June 4 after a long battle with multiple myeloma, a cancer of the plasma cells in bone marrow. A memorial service was held for Taliano at the depot's Recruit Chapel, and he was buried at Beaufort National Cemetery.

Taliano's outlook on life was an inspiration to those who knew him, but particularly to Bruce Kinsey, one of Taliano's co-workers at the museum who has the same form of cancer.

"He had such a great attitude about his disease," Kinsey said. "I can only hope that I deal with this disease half as well as Chuck did. It was the disease that slowed him down, not his attitude. He was always positive."

A Cleveland native, Taliano joined the Marine Corps in 1963 and was selected for Drill Instructor duty at Parris Island in 1966, according to an obituary prepared by Anderson Funeral Home.

Mike Theroux of Merrimack, NH, trained under Taliano in 1966 before he was deployed to Vietnam and later befriended his former Drill Instructor.

"He was a very fair DI to all of his Marines," Theroux said. "He was one of the most caring people in the world and just a really good man."

That famous photo of Taliano was taken less than a month before he was released from active duty, according to his obituary. He was honorably discharged from the Marine Corps in November 1969 and retired to Beaufort in 2001 after working in publishing for more than 30 years.

Taliano began managing the Parris Island Museum's gift shop, the Alexander Ship's Store, in late 2002 and quickly became a living attraction, said Dana MacBain, the museum's exhibits coordinator.

"People would come in the museum, and they could care less about the exhibits or anything else in the museum," MacBain said. "They just wanted to see Sgt. T."

Lt. Sharon Hyland, Parris Island spokeswoman, said Taliano's death has left a void at the place that helped make him famous.

"For generations, Chuck Taliano served as the face of the Marine Corps," Hyland said.

"His iconic image as a Drill Instructor not only reinforced the intensity of a United States Marine, but it stood as an affirmation of the Marine Corps standard.

"Chuck Taliano's legacy will live on at Parris Island in the many lives he touched. He will be missed."

WWI Marine, Soldier Finally Return Home

The remains of a Marine killed in action during World War I were buried recently at Arlington National Cemetery, Arlington, VA, after being missing for more than 90 years.

"It goes to show our country has not forgotten those who were lost overseas," said Navy Capt. Guy Lee, the Regional Chaplain for Naval District Washington.

The remains of 1stSgt. George Humphrey, a native of Ithaca, NY, were found in northeastern France last September, said GySgt. William Dixon, Funeral Director at Marine Barracks Washington.

Humphrey, who was with 6th Marine Regiment, 4th Marine Brigade, attached to U. S. Army 2nd Infantry Division, was killed Sept. 15, 1918, during the battle of Saint-Mihiel, the first major American-led offensive of the war. His Marines hastily buried him the next day.

A year later, one of the Marines sent a letter to Humphrey's brother with details of where the First Sergeant was buried, but attempts to recover the body were unsuccessful. The family said they still kept thinking of him.

"My mother used to point at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and say, 'That could be George,'" said Edith Scott, whose mother was Humphrey's cousin. Humphrey was born Feb. 15, 1889, to Welsh immigrants and joined the Marine Corps in Ithaca, Sept. 13, 1917.

Scott said a year later, he was leading Marines in the Great War.

"You're always going to be proud of your family," she said. "But to hear about the impact he had impressed us more."

French citizens were searching for war relics near the town of Rembercourt-sur-Mad when they found remains they believed belonged to a World War I American service member.

They notified the Joint POW MIA Accounting Command, said Dixon. The JPAC team used a variety of forensic identification tools, including dental comparisons and circumstantial evidence to identify the remains.

"I just hope families of people who are missing in action see this and realize that there is still hope that their loved ones will be found," Scott Said.

Healthcare Services Enhanced, PVAMC Gets $4.74 Million for E-R

The Philadelphia VAMC will get $4.74 million to renovate its Emergency Room as part of the $1 billion VA has obligated to improve VA medical care facilities across the country through building renovations, roadway and walkway repairs, high cost equipment replacement, security improvements, new construction, replacement of steam lines and boiler plants, upgrades in emergency power distribution, and purchases of additional emergency generators among others.

To help Veterans access care, Recovery Act projects in VA medical facilities will add or improve more than 26,000 parking spaces and 39 elevator banks are being built or upgraded. VA will upgrade nearly 14,000 inpatient bed spaces, while 16 pharmacy renovation projects will help Veterans get medicines quicker and more efficiently. More than 14,400 clinical improvement projects, some with multiple exam rooms, will be undertaken.

Funds are also helping ensure VA health care facilities function more efficiently.

system.'

"We know that it is not sustainable to pay people for 60 years to serve for 20," the former Marine Corps Reserve Director said

He said the Pentagon spends $46 billion a year on retiree pay, not including health care.

Among other problems, the current pay and pension system encourages people to leave the service after 20 years, when many reach their highest level of proficiency, Punaro said.

Many go on to take high-paying defense sector jobs while collecting a DoD pension and enjoying discounted military retiree health plans, he said.

Punaro called that arrangement "out-dated," saying it is the kind of "middle-class entitlement program ... not food stamps" that is threatening not just the U.S. defense budget but America's fiscal outlook.

Never one to pull punches, Punaro criticized sitting military leaders for acknowledging but doing nothing about the need for changes to the pay/compensation, retirement and health care systems.

He also pinged military advocacy groups, saying those organizations' primary objective has become ensuring the executive and legislative branches make no changes to the military's pay and benefits policies.

People are getting more expensive. Punaro estimates "35 percent of all DoD spending" goes toward personnel, he told the forum the Pentagon says it's closer to "50 percent." Internal and external budget pressures likely will bring changes to the Pentagon's force structure, John Hamre, CSIS president and CEO, said during the event

"We are at a tipping point," he said.

History shows that when the defense budget is a target for cuts "that we tend to break the force," said Hamre, Deputy Defense Secretary during the Clinton administration.

Pentagon leaders are pushing toward a goal of freeing up $100 billion over five years and shifting those monies to hardware programs.

But is that enough? More and more experts say no. Harlan Ullman, a senior associate with CSIS, said he projects that DoD is "over-programmed or underbudgeted by one-third."
